the 1990s, the number of people in the UK who are employed in the public sector has increased by 1.5 million, from 2.5 million in 1980 to 4 million in 1995. The public sector has become an important employer of people with mental health problems.

There is a growing awareness of the need to improve the mental health of people in the public sector. The Department of Health (1996) has published a report on the mental health of public sector employees. The report states that the mental health of public sector employees is a priority for the government. The report also states that the government is committed to improving the mental health of public sector employees.

The report identifies a number of factors that can affect the mental health of public sector employees. These factors include work pressure, job insecurity, and poor working conditions. The report also identifies a number of strategies that can be used to improve the mental health of public sector employees. These strategies include providing support and training, and improving working conditions.

The report also states that the government is committed to improving the mental health of public sector employees. The government has set a target of reducing the number of public sector employees who are absent from work due to mental health problems by 25% by the year 2000. The government has also set a target of increasing the number of public sector employees who are employed in jobs that are considered to be 'highly stressful' by 25% by the year 2000.

THE SENIOR CLASS PRESENTS

THE EXPLORER OF 1960

MARQUETTE HIGH SCHOOL

ALTON, ILLINOIS

Dedication

We, the senior class of 1960, dedicate this year's Explorer to Christ the Youth, our truest friend. As our best friend, Christ is always present to aid us in our problems to console us in our sorrows, and to share with us our joys. Even when we turn against Him by sin, His love for us never diminishes. We must respond to this unwavering love and make His glorification our purpose for living.

Just as we dedicate this yearbook and all it represents to Christ, so too, we dedicate ourselves and our futures to Him.

Catholic youth will honorably and strongly serve and uphold their Church and their country by their loyalty to Christ in their daily life and the example of personal conduct.

Catholic youth will seek strength at Mass and in Holy Communion and will accept its responsibility to represent Christ in the world.

The good example of Christian living of Catholic youth will please Our Lord and will bring credit and honor to Marquette High School, to your homes and to your parishes.

With cordial blessing,

Sincerely yours in Christ,

+ William A. Connor

My dear Seniors:

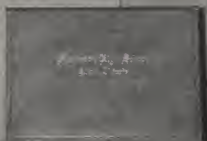

You have chosen "Youth for Christ" as the theme of your Yearbook.

In your own way of speaking, "I'm with you all the way!"

It is my prayer that you will be FOR Christ—not only in youth, but all the days of your life; that you will be IN Christ at death; that you will be WITH Christ in Eternity.

God bless you,

Father Watson

Curriculum

Religion

Theresa Davey points out the sixth promise of Our Lord.

Elaine Patrick and Janice Jarzynka demonstrate the Illicit Process of the Major to a Junior Logic class.

During a Sophomore Religion class, Tom Scyoc emphasizes the duty of obedience to our parents.

Preston Zerwas with the aid of Mr. Vitale explains a lesson in Psychology.

Social Sciences

Pat Henkhaus reports to a Freshman World History class on the duties of citizens.

Mr. Brosamer, American History teacher, receives enthusiastic responses to his question concerning a familiar location.

Jim Hohnstedt seeks Mr. Vitale's approval during a panel discussion in American Problems class.

Physical Sciences

During a Chemistry class, Jeanne McCarthy and Kathy Klaus, aided by Mother Ruth Marie, generate and collect oxygen.

Carol Watsker and Kathleen Stephan observe Biology specimens during a lab period.

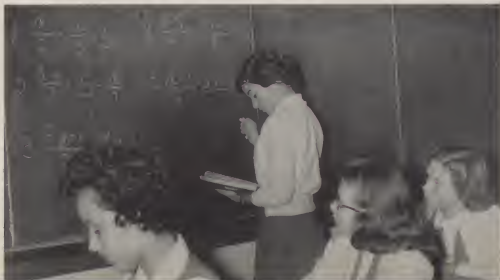

Mother Ignatius watches a demonstration in projectile motion given by Physics students Roger Horrell, Bill Meng, and Dan Kenney.

Mathematics

Mary Ann Dooling and Betty Peters make Trigonometry practical with their construction of a range finder.

Mary Ann Hegeman watches Judy Dondenville construct an altitude of a triangle.

A first year Algebra class works industriously as Kathy May puts test problems on the board.

Languages

Cecelia Swain leads the second year French students in a song from their French newspaper.

Mother Gertrude corrects Jim Jackson in pronunciation as the class listens to a Spanish record.

The second year Latin class listens intently as Edward Ringering shows the parts of the siege tower he constructed.

Language Arts students Don Perry, Tom Hertz, Marlene Gorski, and Diane Goss receive reading booklets from Mother Regina.

The Freshman English class follow Rosemary Evans' explanation of the Dewey Decimal System.

English Classes

Mother Grace's Sophomore English class listens attentively to a record of Edgar Allen Poe's "The Raven."

The juniors listen attentively as Susie Springman gives a report.

With smiles of relief seniors Tony Hauck and Sharon Horstman turn in their research papers to Mother Mary Ellen as Tom Hackworth looks on.

Music Appreciation

Tom Taul, Jim Hendrickson, Steve Wright, Dan Bowers, Russell Meyer and Andy Curlovic gather around the new stereo-machine.

Secretarial Practice students work on their typing skill as Mother Lucy answers the question of Joan Musgrave.

Commercial Classes

Janet Wright, Carol Laughlin look on as Mike Brown explains the process of recording a purchase journal in Bookkeeping Class.

The Voice of Leadership

MY IDEAL

A leader, a humanitarian, a teacher, and the most unforgettable character in all of history is my ideal. In my eyes, and in many others', He is held on a high pedestal which can not be shaken.

He is an unwavering leader who is still trying to lead His people to victory. Undaunted in His pursuit, He lights our way to the perfect goal.

Unlike Stalin He does not force His leadership and beliefs on us but simply asks us kindly to consider them seriously with our free will. He is not a selfish and unsacrificing, but a generous and kind leader.

As a teacher He ranks supreme. He has changed more lives through His lessons than any professor could ever hope to change. He teaches not alone by book but also by His perfect example. He teaches us all how to live, how to love, for He is Love Himself—He is Christ.

NEW FRONTIERS

Space! The stars and beyond! These are the new frontiers of our age, the unchallenged worlds to be conquered with skill and courage.

Man always seeks the new, the different, the undiscovered. The imminent possibility of space travel is new. Its romantic challenge tantalizes the imaginative; its unfathomed mysteries lure the intellectual. And so man will go bravely forward, probing the black depths of space for the knowledge they can yield. Man's unquenchable thirst for knowledge leads him always to new frontiers.

But in his wake are left many unsolved problems, unsurmounted obstacles, undefeated enemies. Before man turns to new horizons, let him first examine the old. The earth indeed has to a great extent been conquered by man's ingenuity. An immense store has been contributed to human knowledge by our home planet. Man has been able to control, counteract, or at least predict most natural phenomena. Great steps have been taken in fighting disease, suffering and poverty.

Indeed, man has been able to control everything except his own weakened nature. In this nature he has taken good progress and used it for evil. His hard-won knowledge has been used as a license for sin, as a weapon of aggression, as a threat.

Yes, the frontiers of matter man has taken one by one and overcome; the frontiers of the soul have not yet been conquered. This internal battleground is a new frontier—it is as new as every moment, as new as each new soul which is breathed forth by God. But it is also an old frontier—it is as old as humanity; it is as old as temptation; it is as old as sin.

This is the frontier which each man must explore and subdue by himself; and only when it is conquered will the outside horizons herald the dawn of a new era in man's temporal and eternal progress.

IT'S UP TO US

Imagine yourself going through your '60 Explorer thirty or forty years from now. President Eisenhower, Dr. Salk, Bishop O'Connor, Pope John XXIII, Dr. Dooley, and all the great men in science, politics, and religion will probably be dead. What kind of a world will we be living in then? Will we have let Communism take us over, or will America still be the home of the free? Will man be on the moon or other planets?

It's really up to us, not to the men of this decade. We will be the leaders, laborers, mothers, fathers, medical men, businessmen, clergy, and scientists of tomorrow. The youth will be our responsibility; we will carve the twenty-first century. What does this mean to us? It means that our life cannot be lived, our tasks cannot be done by our parents and teachers. Although we will be forever indebted to them, we have to learn to stand on our own feet to work out our own future and salvation.

HANDS ARE MAN'S MOST REMARKABLE TOOLS

Take a good look at your hands. Hands are the most used part of the body, barring the eyes and ears. They are used in almost everything—writing, sports, business, recreational activities, eating. In nearly everything you do, hands are used. A tiny baby thinks hands are important, especially his mother's, which feed, clothe, and comfort him. The steady, strong hands of a surgeon hold the difference between life and death in their balance. The extraordinary hands of the priest hold Christ's own Body and Blood. They are the luckiest. The calloused hands of a worker, like those of St. Joseph, do the work Christ most approved of—supporting yourself and your family through manual effort. These people are only a few of all the types of people who use their hands. There are many others, from baseball players to paper hangers, and all need their hands. It is really interesting to note that with all his inventions, man has not found one to replace his human hands.

The Visit

I grasped the cold bronze of the handle. Every muscle in my arm grew taut as I pulled. The unyielding oak door groaned and shuddered in rebellion; it was as if it resented my nocturnal intrusion. The amber glow of the corner street light threw my shadow across the vestibule steps—pitch black against the white stone. Clutching the iron railing, I groped my way up these steps to the inner door. Lighter in weight than the first, it whined open at the slightest pressure of my trembling hand.

What was I doing here? Why had I come to this place? What did I expect to find?

For a moment I paused and reflected on these things. I was puzzled by this whole fantastic night. It was as if some irresistible and overwhelming force was awaiting me on the opposite side of this door, beckoning, no, compelling me to come inside. . . .

I had been restless earlier this evening. Sitting in my dreary room at dusk, I watched the neon lights flicker on: red, yellow, blue, green. The lights usually made me feel alive, eager; but tonight they had had the opposite effect, depressing, thought-provoking. What were these gaudy bits of glass, after all, but a symbol of the devil, enticing me to come and take part in their transient pleasures, false gaiety and night life? They winked and jeered at me. "Come," they beckoned, "come and be happy. Forget your work; your cares." But would that make me happy?

Disgusted, I turned away from the window. That was when I started walking—slowly at first, then faster, the soles of my shoes pounding the hard concrete, my heart hammering, my breath coming in short, quick gasps, faster, faster, faster. . . .

I stepped through the door; it was dark inside, but a warm translucent glow came from somewhere at the opposite end of the building. It revealed a floor of black and white tiles—waxed and polished, but showing signs of the many feet which had traveled its length; long, silent rows of oak pews, their burnished veneer glowing in the half light; tall arches of leaded glass, standing out in ebony relief against soft gray walls; and an arched ceiling, supported by graceful pillars, so far above my head and so blue as to actually look like the summer sky.

In front of the building I discovered the source of light—a vigil light in a red glass bowl suspended from the highest apex of the ceiling by gold chains. Its flame leaped and danced incessantly, casting mobile shadows over the walls and over a marble table-like structure below it. Following the spires rising from this structure, my wondering eyes came to rest finally on an immense wooden cross suspended on the wall. On the cross hung the figure of a man—a man who must have undergone intense suffering and torture, whose bowed head was ignominiously crowned with cruel thorns, from whose wounded side issued a stream of scarlet, whose hands and feet were driven through with the most cruel looking spikes.

Awe-struck, I pondered this image. As I stood there, my heart was filled with compassion. Hardly conscious of it, I moved toward the cross. The candle's glow became brighter, fuller. The Man raised His head and looked at me. His eyes were loving and, somehow, triumphant. I fell on my knees at the foot of the altar and, trembling, whispered, "My God." And as I knelt my heart seemed to fill with a feeling alien to me—a feeling of utter and complete peace. This was why I had come. This was what I had been searching for, vainly, in the bright lights and gaiety. This was peace.

The Voice of Youth...

Mr. Khrushchev:

Several months ago, you loudly proclaimed that your country would "bury" ours. Then when you actually visited our country, you tried to explain away that statement. To try to deceive the world by making bold statements and then to explain them away has always been, is now, and doubtlessly always will be, your most marked characteristic.

But, Mr. Khrushchev, how will you explain this away? How will you explain to your people and all the peoples of the world that the United States is not ready to be buried, that it is ready to rise above you?

At the moment everyone seems to either believe in or strongly suspect your missile superiority, your armament superiority, and your scientific superiority. But how long will this leadership last? Five years? Ten years? Twenty years? Thirty years? Longer? Perhaps you believe that you will extend it indefinitely. Perhaps you are right. But I, for one, do not believe you are.

You may possess the technological and scientific advantages, to maintain and increase these supremacies to which you make constant mention. But you do lack one important thing, that mingled quality of hope and faith in oneself that we do possess—a hope for a better tomorrow and a faith that we will attain this improved future. You may say you have this hope and that your faith in yourself will prove the answer to your problems. Granted you, yourself, may possess these qualities, but do you honestly believe you can continue at your present pace if you deny the people of your country these basic rights of humanity? How long will it be before the inborn rights of man are awakened in the long-slumbering souls and minds and hearts of these people? When this at last happens (it doesn't matter when, for it will happen eventually), your superiority will begin its decline. And when this decline occurs, you will find your fate to be that of the fireman on the greased pole: so easy to go down, but impossible to get back up.

Your present production is so great and your stockpiling so extensive that future Americans will fear to go further; or so you believe. In this assumption you are partially correct; we will not go too far in this armament race but not because of fear, but because we have a conscience. I don't suppose you know what that is. It's something which makes it impossible for us to witness the deaths of hundreds and thousands of innocent people as a result of our own greed. You see, Mr. Khrushchev, this is where we differ. We believe in the soul and in the immortality of that soul. We would never allow our national pride to carry us to the point where we would deliver an unprovoked attack on a nation—even yours. We realize that only a very few people in your country are of your "caliber." The vastness of your country is populated by basically peace-loving people. We could not have their lives upon our consciences—unless you made such an attack unavoidable.

Remember this, Mr. Khrushchev, when you make your brash statements and then try to crayfish out of them. Remember this when you enter into pacts and promises, only to break them. Remember this when you send your propaganda experts and Communistic agents into schools and mediums of communication. Remember this when you persecute those people who dare to revolt against tyranny. Remember that one day you will find yourself in a world no more dominated by your will. Remember this and perhaps you will think twice before you take that fatal step from which there will be no return—the step which plunges both of our countries into total nuclear war.

Remember this and think well before you decide, Mr. Khrushchev, for the decision is yours and yours alone to make.

...The Voice of Freedom

CHILDHOOD TODAY—ADULTHOOD TOMORROW

Many adults seem to have the tendency to look down on teen-agers. Who can blame them? Most certainly we cannot. They look down on us because they know that when we are adults it will be we who will chiefly constitute our country. We will be tomorrow's government officials, tomorrow's mothers and fathers, tomorrow's doctors and lawyers, tomorrow's priests and religious. A heavy load is resting on our young and yet unbowed shoulders; they see us so young and unrealistic, so innocent and gullible, so annoying and scatterbrained.

It is up to us to prove to them that someday we will be fit to be our nation's grown-ups. The best way to do this is by good example. Unless one performs in a manner that will glorify the reputation of teen-agers, he is not being a good example.

Actions follow thoughts. The most important objective to have when being a guide for other teen-agers is high ideals. One with high ideals is almost certain to act in a reputable manner. Anyone who thinks impure or unstable thoughts is apt someday to follow this pattern of thinking and find himself in deep trouble. While on the other hand anyone who thinks with a pure, simple, realistic and capable mind, may someday find himself rewarded for this attribute by the good reputation, the wholesome personality, and the ability of clear thinking which usually follows such a mind.

Good actions are like bricks and we are the bricklayers. When we pile up reputable actions or sturdy bricks in a steady manner, we find that we have built a good reputation or a fine house. We should have enough sense not to come out of our house in bad weather or on days when temptation is lurking about with its bad taste and ill-humor.

If a person takes part in his community life he is usually noted as a civic-minded being. How important this is. Everyone must be considerate of his neighbor and his community. God has told us that we must love our neighbor as ourselves. We can show our love through community work, personal sacrifice, and charitable actions.

A teen-ager is often judged by his social conduct. This includes especially good or bad companions. Young people should always avoid friends who might be an occasion of sin. We are taught this and it is up to us to abide by such teachings. Often it may take courage to abandon sinful companions because although we know that they are sinful we do like them; they have a charming personality. But we must break ourselves away from them. Another thing that I think is also wise is to join parish clubs. There you are assured of wholesome activities and good friends, and a helpful moderator. These clubs include sodalities, C.Y.O. groups, and K.C.'s, etc.

We should prepare ourselves for the future by studying in a industrious, ambitious, and if possible, cheerful manner. Our future life depends so greatly on how we tackle our studies and tasks while we are young. I can imagine President Eisenhower as having been earnest but boyish in his studies. Earnestness is so important!

We should be able to take criticism. This isn't easy. Everyone is born with pride and finds it hard and bitter to swallow, but this is necessary for we will never receive everything we wish.

I have tried to sum up the fact that we must lead a "profound Christian Life." I can do this by trying to be my best example of a wholesome teen-ager by leading a morally, civilly, professionally, socially stable life. I must act as I would have people judge me. I must uphold my reputation and never gamble it, no matter how high the stakes, because I am youth! I must represent them in a manner in which I would want them to represent me. We are on our way to adulthood and we must act that way. We are growing with our country.
